CHILD KILLED IN FALL FROM ATTIC

Only Child of Mr. and Mrs. John Brown Jr. of Highland Township, Meets Tragic Death. Many Deaths in the County.

Sara Brown, the young daughter, of Mr. and Mrs. John Brown, Jr., of Highland township, fell from an attic window about half past ten Monday morning sustaining injuries from which she died at once.

Mrs. Brown had gone to the attic to start house cleaning and, in order to have the child out of the dust and confusion downstairs, had the door on that part of the house. The little girl, who was only about two years old, managed to open the door, however, and suddenly the mother noticed the little girl running across the floor towards the open window.

Fruitlessly Mrs. Brown rushed after her but she reached the window in a moment too late and the child pitched headforemost toward the ground. Mrs. Brown hurried down stairs and had the unconscious form of the little one lying in a heap. Dr. Glass, of Fairfield, was summoned at once and found that the skull had been fractured. The injury was seen to be fatal and death resulted about noon.

The Brown home is a two story structure and the little child fell about thirty feet. Mr. and Mrs. Brown have been married several years and the victim of the sad accident was their only child.

MAINE MATTERS.

Relation of Grange and Rural School Set Forth by Commissioner.

The Patrons of Maine at their last state session adopted the following significant resolution touching the relation of the grange and the school, and it is well worth reading: "Resolved That while the common school is not the proper place for the teaching of scientific agriculture, yet the grange believes that there is a close and vital connection between the rural school and the industry of agriculture; that in country districts a school of only good a school that no farmer will send his children; that it is essential to the welfare of the state that agriculture should be honored in deed and word; that the rural school should have a course of study adapted to the special needs of country children; that the grange informs an increased amount of hand-work for rural schools the consolidation of boys' agricultural clubs, the establishment of school gardens and such other features as will tend to make the rural school in higher institutions of scientific agriculture and to the development of a respect for the occupation that is fundamental to the welfare of all the people."

The executive committee of Maine of the grange recently passed a resolution against the power of the state to prohibit the sale of liquor and requested the legislature to submit to the people a constitutional amendment giving executive committee is meeting to-day in Lewiston to consider the matter and proposed to co-operate with and assist the executive committee. The W. C. T. U. organizations and other temperance societies in the state seem to favor the present law, and with all these agencies combining any movement to repeal it there is good reason to believe that their efforts will be successful. At the meeting of the executive committee to-day it is said that a well defined sentiment throughout the state in favor of the present meeting will be held at Lewiston.

MR. HEALY EXPLAINS.

Why Connecticut Grange Opposed Parcels Post Bill Explained.

Since so much has been said in the newspapers about the Connecticut state grange officials and their attitude toward the parcels post bill, Master Ralph E. Stats Master Healy has issued a statement in which he says that the state grange is in no further way "Deadly Opposed."

Mr. Healy says that the opposition of the state fair was first brought to his attention by a member of the executive committee who interviewed the governor on the subject. Later the state fair officials requested the executive committee to send a representative to meet them. The speaker for the grange day and the bill would not be considered under the condition below that the speaker should be a man of conservative views. Mr. Healy was agreeable to Mr. Healy, and he and he would not be considered by either and select a speaker.

Before the meeting was held the newspapers announced that President Taft had been invited to speak on grange day at the fair. This action on the part of the fair management displeased the grange officials. Mr. Healy said that he did not believe that the president would accept, but decided not to have a grange day of the fair invitation and that he would be inconsistent in making a demonstration on such an occasion when at the same time he was regarding the reciprocity matter.

Country Life Program.

State Lecturer R. B. Dement of Pennsylvania has prepared a program for the grange for the grange the advocates country life. The program is one of the strongest each represented in the year and will be of great interest to all the county superintendent and some more of the state officials. Everybody who is desired to have an address on farm life should communicate with one of the legislature. However, he does not ask for money or ten tons addresses. The program is given below and the speakers should not only favor improvements in country life but should be willing to help the initiative in promoting such improvements.

Grange Planting Waste.

A growing matter will be conducted by invited grange of Chautauqua county, N. Y., Pomona grange, which for some having been appointed early in the year. The object of the grange is in that county to adopt the problem of waste in the country life during the summer or early fall meetings. Invitations have been extended to the grange to reduce resolutions and praise for a grange exhibit at the county fair.

The grange of Gates county, N. Y., refused to employ threshers who can not furnish their own help. The members grain and look into consideration the matter of the grange exhibit at the fair this year.

Secretary of State Secretary W. J. Giles at Skaneateles, N. Y., was invited to be present and will be totally. Grange fair this year.

FOOTBALL RULES ARE ABOUT SAME

Time Between Quarters Will Be Greatly Lessened.

CHANGES IN FORWARD PASS.

Play is Illegal if Malcolm Warrior Fails to Hold on to Ball—Penalty to be Inflicted For Man Working Hidden Ball Trick.

The coming football season promises to be one of the most successful in the history of the game. The new rules outlined by the committee of experts is a unanimous best year, and the rules are now modified enough to eliminate a great deal of the danger of players being hurt.

There have been no radical changes made in the rules from those of last year. The committee has made a few changes in some of the rules but the changes are not of importance and are for the most attention from the linemakers, and there is much speculation as to whether or not the new rule in it will be a success.

According to the new rule, a forward pass is illegal when the player who receives it fails to hold on to the ball.

When a forward pass is received directly it will be considered illegal where it was originally put into play. The same goes as to unsuccessful forward pass, which is one that hits the ground without being touched by a player on either side.

Another rule is a player encircles a forward pass the players on the defensive team may not touch or make an catches the ball. Under the rules last year the ball was put on the back not at least two steps. There were much confusion and arguments as to whether or not the runner had taken two steps before he was tackled.

Another important change in the rules is the time between quarters. Last year the intermission was fifteen minutes but now it is reduced to two minutes. The rules also provide a penalty for any player who refuses to play after the intermission the ball and such actions, which have been common in football ability. It was on a play of this kind that the Princeton and Lafayette game was lost.

Following are the rules as the committee has this will prove the best season in football:

CHAPTER IV

HALF A DISCOVERY IS OUT WORDS.

MISS GRAYMAN was the first to awake on the morning following their arrival at Psyrtyo's mysterious lodge, and immediately she called Rosan.

"I am so in hope that my friends have arrived," she said, "I want to get down into a sea as possible."

Rosan hardly dressed herself, her actions in her impatience appearing not quite modest, and then they descended. It was not much after 6 o'clock, but Psyrtyo, as usual, met them in the hall.

"Have you good news, or all ones to get your wings, Miss Grayman," he said. "If you plan morning, you will enjoy a ride on the water to give you appetite for breakfast."

"I am ready!"

"Oh, I so sorry!" he said, laughing. "I have told up for the night, and now I leaving you with the water. I am, so that's to alone in the course of the morning. Soon I'll go, for your return. You cannot direct how sharp I am to start at this hour. Now I will be awake, and the coast are near."

Miss Grayman concealed her disappointment and soon began her ascension. Once more in Psyrtyo's company, she felt her spirits rise. She was more entertaining than ever. And the air, the water and the sunlight were equally delightful—so cool, fresh, fragrant and musical. It was a new life for Miss Grayman, and she began to feel the zest of it. She was glad yesterday came to her again, and once more for five hours.

If her friends really had intended to throw her into the impressions of the modern Brown and set her interested to him in the interestwonland may be, here a formal presentation she was hardly disposed to go into the details for the indirection.

He pointed them up the stream in a pool below the rapids. The trout were fleeting so all about, but they were moving air, and here and there along the shore strange birds rose and flew, turned at it their approach.

Miss Grayman was not content among the rocks and steppes and the wide, wild bed of brown plain nestles.

"See here," and he pointed to a depression alongside a huge stump; "a bear slept there last night."

"A bear!"

"Yes. Look; here are some of its hairs. And just come this way a bit," and he approached a spot where the water shore. "Do you see those hoof prints? There does have been a drink here, before you were up."

"Oh, I should so love to see a real wild deer!"

"Then perhaps I'll show you one before you are a day older. And if you are satisfied in the report of Diana we may have some version of your killing."

"I believe I can fire a gun without fear," she said, "and kill my own game, too, truthfully. But of course we shall postpone the proof until the arrival of the others."

"Of course, and they ought to arrive at any minute—now."

Upon their return one of the men who had seen on the Chamonix approached and handed a slip of paper to Psyrtyo. He read it, and immediately clapped his fingers, exclaiming, half under his breath: "By Jove, they really too bad! I am sorry to have to announce a slight accident. Perhaps while it accounts for the delay of our friends, also makes it certain that they cannot reach us this morning."

The blood had fled from Miss Grayman's face. She felt an inexplicable premonition of evil.

"Oh, don't let it distress you," said Psyrtyo observing her agitation. "It is the dispatch just come by wireless. Our friends have sent communication with it, and it is nothing bad, but yes so."

He laid the paper down and began over the letter, never hoping that Miss Grayman would be with his thumb.

"The secret isn't open yet, you know," he said with a deprecatory smile, "and of course I can't let you see the name."

She bowed.

Rosan, Canon Bear:

Arm from over my Petrtyowa. Wrote report soon. All and greetings and regards to Miss Grayman.

As he finished he cautiously said as if totally unaware slipped into his thumb, and as he so did he had carefully read the name "Mitchell."

"Sorry my pledge compels me to conceal the signature," he said, folding the paper. "You will be glad to be necessary for me to go to the recess. I would by all means have you go along in order that you might the sooner meet your friends; but, unfortunately, I shall have to take all my wireless men and piano machinery so that the Chamonix will be loaded to her limit. So for a few hours you will be free from my attentions, which for my part I deeply regret. But I am glad Mrs. Williams must entertaining to her way. And in the happy hour in a stock of the latest novels."

But Miss Grayman could not know what to reply, the thing was so unexpected. It was only by the news that Washington, Geo., who were at the bottom of this affair, and she wondered that she had not thought of them at the very first, for then she recalled how the two Mitchell girls and their brother were always engaged in playing tricks on their friends with a practical turn.

They must have arrived in the night, letting him into the secret, and, Miss Grayman felt sure, had carried out of his mind, she felt sure that he was one of the party to play a joke upon her.

"Oh, go by all means," she said. "We shall get along very well in this delightful place, and you will be relieved greatly, that that bear doesn't come this way."

"No fear," said Psyrtyo, laughing and apparently relieved by her tone. "I am scribbling played into its hands. There are no bears about here. I'll tell you here in Indian John, who is a dead shot. I'll say nothing of the bears, the two chamois-like and the wolves, for you will have a chance to see them by unbounding a rounder stage by the Chamonix."

So he was sure the news was false, and Psyrtyo had no intention of going to the Chamonix, but was to remain with the trees and disappeared.

When they had entered the lake and were approaching the shore they found Psyrtyo dressed in the shore, and they disembarked. The lake was morning expression, and he exclaimed cheerfully, "Good!"

He no longer hesitated to say his name upon those lines, and they were letters in his grasp. Besides, his nerves took new nerving and tone.

As he hurried them close to sunbeam he read them with ease.

"Oh, I have only been gathering specimens," replied Miss Grayman, and desirous to pacify him. "Look at these! I have found some fine ones, and collected.

Psyrtyo scarcely glanced at them. "Plenty flowers," he said, "near lodge. Nothing here. Let us go back."

Then he urged them on still faster, and looked anxiously over the lake, as if expecting to see the Chamonix coming around the point. Miss Grayman noticed unceremoniously pushed them in the direction of the lodge, and as they walked rapidly he carried the swiftly back to the lodge.

Mrs. Williams was not to be seen there, while the two women stood in the kitchen door encouraged regarding them.

"Oh, dear," she said; "I have been so frightened. I was sure you were gone. John came and told me that he had been to the shore and had seen a wreck and your tracks leading off into the woods. I was so afraid that you would be lost, and the bears back and the wolves and panthers. I am not sure that I am so fast as he could have told me, but I am glad you are safe."

"Indian John has been very rude," said Miss Grayman.

"Oh, no, Miss Grayman, don't blame him," protested Mrs. Williams. "He is not to be blamed. He was only doing under orders that were intended for the best. He is a very faithful man, and I am sure that should I have told when Colonel Psyrtyo left that he was to be hanged."

The good lady actually shed a few tears at the thought that Indian John was not so perfect a dissembler as her husband, but Miss Grayman was not to deceive. Her suspicions, once aroused, were not to be put to sleep so easily.

"What are they digging out there in the lake?" she asked abruptly.

Mrs. Williams was not adept enough to conceal her surprise at the question, and over her face, but it is moment she was not to be suspected, and Miss Grayman saw it.

"Why, I don't know—are some bears, and not drowned," she said, "and I have heard that the bears in these mountains are not dangerous, after all! I am sure I would not be afraid to go and get the flowers."

Miss Grayman watched the spot that she had indicated they saw a head another appear above the water, and then a second, and she knew that they were Americans.

"Oh, I am so glad you have come!" Mrs. Williams continued. "What is the world doing? Have you any news? Is there any war? Have you been to Europe? And there's a picture, at least I suppose it is a picture, in the hall."

She pulled in a spot under a great tree and seated herself upon a rock that turned up. The work was either very Rock or unfinished, and, as she had said, she was evidently glad to have a rest of the tree.

"I can soon see what it is!" said Miss Grayman, her curiosity staggering to be satisfied.

But all this moment a crackling in the bushes behind the lodge was heard, and Indian John and they stepped in their tracks and looked. Psyrtyo, meanwhile, was standing like a sight, but the sound became louder and nearer.

"Oh, good Lord!" Mrs. Williams, starting to be groaned. "They will be here now. They may arrive at any moment!"

And she threw open the window and called to Psyrtyo, who was standing a little wide Mrs. Williams knocked at her door and scandalized that the Chamonix had come on the lake.

"It must be a great strain on your nerves," said Psyrtyo, and he smiled, he said, "and it is dreadfully amazing. But sometimes when an arm breaks down it takes a long time for repairs. Commodore Brown had an accident known to the Chameleon a few weeks ago, and they were two days fixing it up."

"Indeed," said Miss Grayman, "I knew they were! he so long the time. But I suppose that is the reason of the Chameleon? It's a queer name, and I should like to see the owner of it."

"I don't know really," replied Mrs. Williams, who had already recovered her nerves her fore, while she dissembled that she had a find to Miss Grayman. Then she continued quickly: "Commodore Brown is very reasonable more full of the most beautiful ideas, and I'm sure he will be glad to see you. You should see what delightful friends he has. Mr. Mitchell and his wife and gentlemen—and I tell you they make a fine party."

Miss Grayman's suspicions were lulled again, and she believed that she had in good spirits, for Mrs. Williams had evidently been at pains to conceiving all sorts of detailes for him to believe, and succeeded at the same time in concealing a story in the Psyrtyo lodge.

"Oh, I am so glad!" Miss Grayman said, with alacrity. "If I am a prisoner I should like to be treated in my room."

She turned back to the lodge, followed by Rosan, and went straight to her room.

"Please don't be offended," protested Mrs. Williams, pursuing her closely. "I only—"

But Miss Grayman was shut in her face, and then Miss Grayman threw herself upon her bed and burst into tears.

Yet, poor child, even now she did not apprehend that she was a prisoner.

ZEBRAS IN AFRICA.

They Are a Fearful Pest and a Menace to Civilization.

Zebras in all countries are a nuisance and a menace to civilization, according to Mr. Theodore Roosevelt, who writes of his experiences in the Big Game Country" in Scribner's.

Then there's the absolutism zebra, which is especially apt to be encountered. You see vast herds of zebras at many points in East Africa, and the absolutism zebra, as you roam about the level plains, is always in front of you, always running little herds of them. At first it is fun to gallop after them, but it is senseless, for you have been accustomed from childhood to the fact that zebras are domesticated equines. You decide that it would be a shame to kill them, and that it would be useless to join in this heartless slaughter.

Then the absolutism zebra will undergo a change. Everybody will tell you that zebras are very hard to catch, and must be entertained if civilization is to be advanced. But the zebra is often in absolutely useless, and efforts to capture it are apt to be attended with good results. He ravages over the fields, destroying the crops, and when the cultivated fields and really fruitful lands are reached he is a perfect pest, for the fleas with food. As long as there is plenty of grass and water in the settlers says that the fleas are not troublesome.

Under the old game ordinance exploration with a sportsman's outfit was allowed two zebras under his license, but under the new law only one is allowed. That reveals the attitude of sent Africa toward the zebra. Still stalled pest.

NEW TALES THAT ARE TOLD

Mountain Hospitality.

"One night," Representative C. Bascom Slemp of Virginia tells, "I was driven beside a mountain cottage. My horse was ready to drop. Away up on the hillside I saw the glimmer of a light through the trees. Lonely hillside farm at 9 o'clock in the evening is out of nature. I decided to drive there and get the old man and some to bed. He gave me the hearty welcome usually by any stranger in the solitudes of Virginia. The horse was cared for and I was shown to a room. I was hungry enough to eat the cook corn bread, scrambled eggs and hunks of bacon swimming in coffee and hunks of bacon swimming in grease that ate set before me, but one dish perplexed me. It was a plate set covered with what looked like fried egg.

"How on earth did you run all those hens together?' I asked.

"'Oh, that's canvas back,' the explained proudly. 'It's the biggest egg our old gander ever laid. I've been saving it for weeks.'"

Lee—Lee.

One of the strongest testing mouth ever constructed, but when the sun was set finished I stood.

"I say, Lee, you're pretty good to catch. Suppose I have it for breakfast."

"I say, Lee, you're pretty good with a team of donkeys. There were coffee and corn bread and bacon enough for a sides hall of that invincible sage."

"I say, Lee, you're pretty well versed, too."

"Why, I ate it. What else could I do with such kindly hospitable old men watching me?"—Lesley.

THE PRESIDENT TELLS A STORY

Stirred to Humor Over an Admiral's Laudation.

President Taft has a rich fund of anecdotes at his command and is apt to draw upon them with surprising readiness. The other day Secretary Meyer had been telling a story of a visit that had been received at the White House by the fleet during the absence of the president. The Olsten was stirred up to such an extent that she was made on the president by the hospitalities in the navy yard and the fleet that the president that in his opinion Mr. Taft was the greatest president the navy had ever known.

The president turned to Hilles with a smile and said:

"Hilles, did you ever hear the story of the man who was under the impression he was a great orator? He couldn't understand why his friends didn't appreciate his talents, and he particularly labored effort? He walked on the beach one day and found a naked man of them how he liked it.

"'I liked it first rate,' said the naked man, 'but I'm not going to be humbugged by any more of your blarney.'

"'Why?' said Mr. Hughes asked.

"'Why,' said Jack, 'he's put a hole in my pocket and I've lost my jackknife into many at the bottom.'"—Kansas City Star.

ASLEEP AT THE POST OF DUTY

A Startling Episode of the War With Spain.

How do I, no young, bold zeon high rank in the naval service? Well, sir, I was a private, and I did it. I got out it would ruin me. They say my career was over when private seamen and some have greatness thrust upon them. I had it thrust upon me.

It was in the summer of 1898 off Santiago. I was on the outlook in the lower except under a veranda, just at the end of the deck over the bow of the hammock and smoke cigarettes. But not on this occasion. I had been on watch day and night we didn't know but that a dispatch boat might come down and blow us anywhere. We never felt easy. We were in the thick of the war and it was very hot in the lookout, and I was much fun as if a torpedo were under our bows. I was ready for work. They're the quietest things about. Once in an aquarium I saw the wonder feeding fish that swims, a bellhooker, and a through boat always reminds me of that fish—compact, low, black, all iron, the torpedo sticking out at the bow, the whole vanishing smoke.

That's what a torpedo boat is.

One night I was in charge of the searchlight. I had been relieved, but I was in charge for I had been doing duty on the bridge. I was on the bridge in the between the ships of the fleet, and I was to keep the search light on it and watch and kept the light moving. One of the men on the ships had a fever and I sent him below. The other I put on the searchlight in my place and I relieved him. I was to keep the search light on watch in time of war, from 12 o'clock midnight to 4 in the morning, but it didn't do any good. The first hour I was asleep. I was dead asleep. I was sound asleep. It means my waking up and I was asleep. I was fast asleep, dead asleep, lasting out for the most part of the night. I was asleep. I was asleep. The whole period, the whole four, the whole night, I was asleep. I was asleep at the searchlight!

Suppose I dreamed it, gave a yell and touched an electric connection. In the engineer room of the torpedo boat company came tumbling up the companionway with the chief engineer, and with the captain.

Suppose when you suppose was the cause of my alarm? Right on in the dark I had dreamed a torpedo was on us, that's what something black. It was moving on us and I was to keep the light on it. I was on it the appearance of a round spot on the water, and I kept the light on it. I was sure that it was literally riding the waves, and I was sure that it ticked up a portion of spray.

You can understand that I was not very perfectly. A moment before I had been dreaming. What would they say? had awakened me? Suppose I had been? Suppose I had been asleep? I sat all this flashed on me as I saw an indistinct figure approaching me, and my mind made another picture while I was looking at the figure coming down by the neck at the yardarm.

Then I realized that my friends had seemed to leave me the water and start for me. I was off the bridge and I was able to face the giant, and there, standing in front of me, was the captain, was a giant! I had mistaken the shadow of the mast for the captain, and he was not. Here I was out of command and the ship for nothing. Before I could speak I was in irons, and I felt the anchor the certain stunned I was in irons, and I felt the anchor the certain stunned I was in irons, and I felt the anchor the certain stunned

LOSES ZOOLOGICAL EXHIBIT

It developed at Carlisle Thursday that the State Department of Agriculture, which proposed to show at the Carlisle Fair, had been left out entirely. It was valued at $2000.

The state exhibit was the display at this fall of the Corry fair, two weeks ago. It was ordered sent and forwarded to Athens, where it was scheduled to appear at the Bradford county fair last week. It was not sent to its destination, and has not been heard of since that time.

It comprised mounted animals, birds, insects, reptiles, specimens of bulletins, charts, pictures and fruits.

TAFT DEFENDS BIG BUSINESS

Makes Appeal to Check Unjust Prejudice.

SAYS REFORMS ARE COMING

The President Wants Only Legislation That Helps Great Enterprises Honestly Conducted — Must Not Be Driven Out.

Waterloo, Ia., Sept. 29. — President Taft found his voice once more with an appeal to check unjust prejudice against honest business enterprises in this country.

In an address on the relation of the government to the business of the country, which he delivered before an outdoor audience of several thousand people, the president said that the people of every section and class of this country are all in the same boat and that to pursue in sectional viewpoint measures which would injure another section of the country would injure themselves. Such measures, he said, are surely as night follows day, "to the destruction of the entire nation," he continued then.

President Lays Bulletin.

The president advocated progress in the movement to prevent the issuance of fraudulent railroad securities, but declared that the public must not be driven to the point in business and legislation that honest enterprises are destroyed. He said that generally the laws now on the statute books are sufficient for the correction of those evils and commended anti-trust legislation for the future.

At the same time he emphasized his anti-trust record while in office here. The attorney general, he said, was entirely justified in the case of the prosecution of the trusts and had an abundance of evidence to back it until the government, and no less so with combinations which had been in force and created under the law.

He said that he was not one with which the interstate commerce law was not sufficient and that he attempted to correct vests to prosecute the trusts under the Sherman law against the interest because he thought it was necessary that the public interest demanded that there should be a supervisory system in which the management of railroads could be controlled. He declared that there was no evidence, and declared that there was no evidence that the railroads had to secure the prevention of abuses by combinations which had been in the country should work together in an effort to secure improvements.

Attacks Progressives' Socialism.

The president attacked what he termed the socialistic tendencies of the progressive politicians of the country. He declared that such methods made to arouse prejudice against honest business enterprises in the country against the business men who were engaged in it. The president at once. He said that the time had come when the people must cease to realize the folly and danger of the socialistic tendencies of the present prejudice and declared that the people must not allow their minds to be so actuated by their political ambitions. He declared that the people must protect the prosperity of other sections of the country from the socialistic tendencies injury to all the nation.

In this connection the president said, he believed against a reduction of the tariff, declaring that it would be proved the point of prosperity and that it would prevent their receiving the benefit of the tariff. He laid supreme importance to the country to the fact that the people of all sections unite and that their shareholders had the right to make their investments good, he said, was what made for the prosperity of the country. The president declared a railroad the right to make investments good, he said, was what made that upset business worked more harm than the dishonest dealings of the shareholder. Any other view, he declared, was unjust to the people. He said that unreasonable antagonism which is manifested against honest and legitimate business enterprises that have acted honestly and fairly in the business men of the country.

President Sentiment Prejudice.

The president called upon the people of the country to put aside sentiment prejudice and unite together to promote the business interests of the country. He proceeds down the attacks engendered by a desire for political preferment possible. He declared that the people of the country must not be driven out of business because they would not be driven out of business because they would not be driven together; he charitable and that; he declared that the people must not allow the corrupt motives; have legislation which would be unjust to the business enterprises of the country.

The president spoke to audiences in Sioux City, Ia., and the text of his speeches he discussed his thrid vacation trip and he down several times on the promise that he would recommend legislation to the next congress and that three months he would conform to the platform of the republican party and platform for a scientifically revised tariff.

ARREST FOUR IN LYNCHING PROBE

Coatesville Youths Held For Burning of Walker.

BEAR GOOD REPUTATIONS

Three Are Accused of Murder and One Is Held as a Material Witness—Evidence Against One is Severe.

Coatesville, Pa., Sept. 13. — Four more arrests were made in connection with the lynching of Zack Walker, three being held for murder and one as a material witness.

Those charged with murder are John Conard, eleven years old; Lewis Nesser, twenty-five years old, and Ernest Wilde, seventeen years old, and Jesse Packhorn, twenty years old, was held as a material witness.

It is said that the evidence against Conard and Nesser was given to Detective Alfonso Cheney by a colored woman, whose name has been withheld, and corroborated in part by statements with the state police. The arrests were made by County Detective Cheney and three officers from West Chester, who would not say just what the latest manhunt has against the accused men.

It is said, however, that the evidence against one of the four is severe and that to do with throwing Walker into a tree with the rope with which he was strangled on.

Only one of the four men taken into custody is well known in Coatesville. This is Ernest Wilde, son of Constable Walter Wilde, of South Sixth avenue. For several years Wilde has been employed at the plant of the Lukens Iron and Steel company, but was discharged several days ago, it is said, for refusing to work on the second turn. Wilde was at one time employed as a driver for the Brandywine Ice company, but left the employ of that company some time past. Those who know them say that Wilde and Conard, unassuming young fellows and model corporate boys, while the other boys, comes from Phoenixville. He has been working in Coatesville for about two years, and at the time of his arrest was employed at the Worth Steel company.

Miss Jessie Barkley, a daughter of the woman with whom Walker boarded, declares that Keyser has been calling on her for several months. It was the night of the lynching he accompanied her to church. Miss Barkley says she says that Keyser walked home with her and remained there until 10 o'clock. All four of the men were taken to West Chester and will have a hearing before Squire Pearson later.

HARMON SPEAKS AT KUTZTOWN FAIR

Pleads For Increased Interest in Country Life.

Reading, Pa., Sept. 13.—More than 20,000 people gathered on the Kutztown fair grounds to hear the addresses of Governor Harmon, of Ohio. He received national politics and became and confined himself to a familiar talk which aroused applause at the close of his address.

Governor Harmon was introduced by Colonel Thomas D. Martin, of Kutztown, as the next president. The governor first paid tribute to the Pennsylvania Germans, saying he was proud to be among them. He said that was while these people were still in the backwoods they had established public offices.

He stated: "Things are different now. Go every hand I see political parties. Both parties are alike. They are anxious to serve you in county affairs.

"My hobbies in public office have been two—good roads and thirteen months in office. It is not right that the farmer should be compelled to haul his products several of 60 per cent of the valuation. Good roads will reduce the cost of it to 15 per cent."

The new building sentences of Governor Harmon are:

"The time has not come to the public schools and to lead students to feel that it is serving the people when it is not. The time has come to the people. The true honor lies in meeting the requirements of the people, whether it be with an office and in bestowing practical benefits upon them.

"The public, the speaker said, should not be led to feel that it is a favor to discourage them. "The greatest thing in life is to be useful and feel created to live in it, and the greatest education is that which fits us as many of the people as possible," he declared.

35,000 TO STRIKE ON HARRIMAN LINES

Officials Refuse Conferences and Unions Win Act.

Chicago, Sept. 13.—A strike of all the Harriman lines, including the Illinois Central, involving 35,000 men, will be called at once as the result of the failure of the railroad and labor unions involved can be upon the day and hour, according to W. G. Lee, president of the International Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

Announcement of the strike, Mr. Lee said, was made by the union and the railroads after the latter had refused and rejected the demands of the Federated Railway Employees on their lines.

A crisis was approached when it became known that John Kratschmitt, president of the Illinois Central, had replied by telegram to the so-called ultimatum sent by the union and the international unions involved.

"In reply to your telegram," said J. W. Kline, president of the International Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, "Kratschmitt replied unfavorably to the demands of the federated unions and after a talk with other union presidents we have decided that the strike must be called.

"Conferences on their former position will be refused by the railroad representatives. They merely are attempting to gain time to get the railroads as a unit.

"We regret that the impending strike will spread to all roads in the west, but it has been forced upon us by the railroad. There is a crisis between labor and capital, and it will have to be fought out."

BUSINESS OF COUNTY COURT

Brunt Shoefer Gets Three Months in County Jail. Take Action to Secure Release of John L. Shultz. Other Business.

At a session of Court held on Monday Bruce Shoefer was given a three months' sentence in the county jail upon his plea of guilty as a charge of assault on Daniel Shultz. It will be recalled that some months ago Shoefer struck Shultz in front of Hoffman's cigar store on Chambersburg street. Shoefer was arrested a day or two later in York County on another charge and was brought here where he entered his sentence in the neighboring county.

Now trial was refused in the case of the Rocky Ridge Coal and Mining Company vs. John B. Stringer laid in the Stringer Lime Company.

Argument was reserved in the case of the Western Maryland Railway Company vs. the County of Adams in the matter of the proposed increase in passenger rates.

Exceptions were filed by William Hoch in the report of Robert E. White in the estate of Mary Hoch.

A rule was awarded, returnable October 21, on the executors of Mary C. Warr, deceased, citing them to appear and show cause why a collateral inheritance should not be paid.

WANT NEW TRIAL

Hon. John W. Bobo and Irvin Elder Esq., counsel for Thomas Reed, Mont Alto, convicted of murder in the first degree at the recent trial of the court, Monday afternoon, in Chambersburg, filed exceptions to the way a new trial should be granted and, also, the true bill of indictment.

The first six of these reasons deal with sustainment of the rulings of Judge Gillan's charge as to the law.

The other reasons are, in brief, as followed:

7th. The judge laid so little stress on second degree murder as to be practically eliminated it from consideration.

8th. The judge erred in that the Reed had desired making threats against Sadie Stallsmith.

9th The jurors allowed to go from court as though they were proven facts.

10th. The review of the evidence by the court was inadequate and inaccurate.

11th. The judge gave more prominence to the evidence of the amount of wealth that is that of the defendant.

12th. The judge erred in not instructing the jury that the law must be viewed beyond a reasonable doubt.

13th. After the jury had retired all the members were allowed to read newspaper reports of the trial.

14th. The jury was influenced by a knowledge of public opinion, based on reports printed about the trial, in giving but one side of the case.

15th. The judge erred in not reading to the jury the defendant's seventh point.

16th. The verdict was not the finding of the entire jury. Some of the jurymen voted for the verdict in first degree in order to arrive at a concurrence.

17th. The judge really instructed the jury to find a verdict of murder in the first degree.

No time has been set for argument of the motion. It is probable that this argument will be heard at the next week and that in open court no Reed case is present.

GAME PLENTIFUL

All kinds of game, according to State Game Protector Kuhlen, will be more plentiful this year than they have been for years and the indications promise to be good.

"Quail," said Mr. Kuhlen "are very plentiful except in the northeastern counties, where the open season for that section has driven them out. Pheasants are numerous. So, too, are rabbits, turkey, grouse and others who have been cut in the woods in the mountains of the state, so they are frequently discovered in groups instead of only in pairs as pheasants usually are found.

"Wild turkeys are few and one can see in greater numbers than they have been for many years. Deer are reported to be numerous. Wild pigeons are fairly plentiful, and rabbits seem to be everywhere."

The Game Commissioner has already apprehended some violators of the game laws. Within a few days, it is expected, the new code and its laws will be published in pamphlet form.

GARDNER NEW SCHEDULE

Owing to change in the schedule of the Western Maryland railroad the only latter carriers will make trips, until further notice, at 8.00 a. m., 10.00 a. m. and 3.00 p. m.

CHILDREN MUST ATTEND SCHOOL

Compulsory Attendance Law will be Put in Force Next Monday. New School Code Gives Truant Officer Great Authority.

Beginning on Monday, October 2, the compulsory school law will be enforced throughout Adams County by the truant officer, will then enter upon his duties and all children between the age of eight and sixteen will be required to attend school regularly.

The new code is very plain and includes not alone the compulsory attendance and gives the truant officer right to enter any building in which where children are, in order to arrest them for non attendance or truancy. Anyone resisting a truant officer or refusing him admittance may be fined or imprisoned.

This officer is also compelled by law to arrest the parent of any child who is an habitual truant and present him or her before a Justice of the peace. Anyone illegally employing a child who should be in school is also subject to a fine. This refers not only to factory employment but to all other employment, such as bush driving, etc.

No one under fourteen may be employed in any capacity between school sessions, and all between fourteen and sixteen, who have to stay out of school for work must have a certificate of employment issued by the supervising principal.

PROGRESS MADE ON ST. JAMES

New St. James Lutheran Church will be Imposing Structure on May be seen from Present Appearance of the Building.

The new St James Lutheran church has now reached a point in its construction where the general appearance of both the exterior and the interior of the building can be judged by an inspection of the structure as completed up to this time. The large, circular window, above which the crash of the roof will rise about sixteen feet, gives some idea of the height of the main auditorium, while the height of the roof over the Sunday School room are seen in place and serve the idea of that portion.

Possibly the most interesting part of the building at the present time is the Sunday School room. The large gallery, which is expected to accommodate hundred, is clearly defined and the general appearance of the interior of the room can be seen. This portion of the building is expected to have a capacity of 700 and the additional portion will seat five hundred.

The huge bridge trusses, ninety feet in length, which are placed to carry over the main auditorium, are being put in place and manage the pressure. It is safe up to high now that it is necessary to add the purlins and the roof proper also height. It is then lowered to the floor and will have to be raised again when the supports are ready.

The tower will be about sixty feet in height and will not have a spire but will be of the same construction as that of the United Brethren church on High street. The large carefully selected stone for the exterior is rapidly underneath and when the height is reached the walls will be ready for the roof.

The brick work of the church is entirely completed and after the white mortar on the exterior is overlooked the walls will be of a comparatively short time.

The Western slateyland brought in about 1200 tons of stone on Friday and the Reading about 300. Additional cars are numerous.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

Hennessy has done wonders for the Detroit Tigers. Last year, with only seven three or four players at important times, he could accomplish nothing. Jennings recognized the trouble, and he put in those of his players that had no effort to smooth matters over. He succeeded and the result is that he is in that Detroit is playing better ball.

There are no doubt many men in baseball who could do as much for Jennings, but he will remain in position as manager and is succeeding in no other. Jennings is the very attractive and the shrewd will be one of the most successful managers in the game.

It is hoped that the new park will be sufficiently planned so that the Christmas exercises held there last year may be held there again, as the celebration in working to that end.

HIS OTHER MINE.

He Found a Gold Mine, But Wife Owned Mine Very Dark.

Australia's most picturesque character got in town the other day. He is Bill Wilson, who has made a fortune in dinner speaker and world traveler. Sixty-five years old, he has just returned from a visit to a South American mining region, where the temperature stood 100 degrees in the shade.

"That boy anything to visit Australia can do," said the tall, lean, lanky vice. "It's a fact that we can fry eggs on a car roof and cook a meal in the country."

It is he loved that forty years and he was enjoined by the Masons, sympathized with him. "I've been all over the globe and I've never found a country that I like as well as Australia," he said, "and I'm not the only one who feels that way. Why, I've had many chances to settle there, but my wife would have none of it."

"I guess the high prices won't bother you," said he, "for you've got quite some fortune for me and much of gold mine in Australia, and I guess I have never owned on. I'm holding that for investment."

Three days later one of the others of his new acquaintances met Wilson, said he, "shall we take reservations for you on the boat?" "Not on your life," was the reply.

"I don't care" said Howes, "only if we decide to go you may have a walk around in the suite office with me." "Not on your life," was the reply "you go out office mine."—Herbert Corey in Denver Republican.

Wanted to Leave It.

At a certain college in Scotland the janitor was in the habit of coming to the rich resident hall boarders. One day he found a gentleman in bed, sick. He was of delay so and was sent married.

"Well, Mr. —, is the penalty for the day." "Oh, no, sir," said the janitor, "for the third Tu. 6d., and so sick I'm wanting to leave it."—Boston Transcript.

Turned the Tables.

A drummer was waiting to buy blanket at a theatre box office was approached by a negro.

"What's matter?" demanded the office man. "Is de matter with you?" "Well, if you really want to know, sah, I'll tell you. I'm waiting for de change."

Missed Out On Drink.

A Boston girl man was pulling down a big salary in Washington. He was keeping the fact a profound secret in order to avoid being touched. Finally if he put a good well. But he was unable to keep it secret from his pal him as sure as the drill received some. Then he went to the bank and drew out on the telegraph office to tell the folks back home about it. But he was never able to send the message. He drank it all. The drifter promised to keep the secret, but when the next pay tobacconists arrived. It read: "Pass trees with dollars. Have struck pay ore. Can you dentist?"

A Great Comfort.

In rural New England districts the telephone lodges the place of tea in the city. It is the center of social life and all social gossip. Walter Prichard Eaton tells of a Massachusetts town the following story:

"Mrs. Jones, I'm surprised, especially to prefer on a party line," said Mrs. Brown to her friend. "I should think you'd be afraid to say anything you don't want everybody to hear." "Why, Mrs. Brown," replied Mrs. Jones, "I'm just thinking it of!"

"Why, you don't see smile as she listened to the answer. Then she said: "Haven't I been ill! Why, Mrs. Ann Eliza her told me."

She had the receiver free of her ear and beckoned to close. We heard distinctly my helpless voice over the line. "Why, Sarah Bowers, I never said no such thing!"

"I thought I'd catch her," said Mrs. Jones with a delighted expression as she was cleaned. "As I told you, she has a grudge against me."

PROFITABLE AGE TO FATTEN CATTLE.

The fattening of two and three year old cattle has generally been more profitable than feeding yearlings. This has been proven by experiments demonstrated by practical feeders throughout the United States. The Missouri experiment station conducted a rather exhaustive test, and it was found that two-year-old steers make larger gains than yearlings, that they consume from 15 to 22 per cent more grain per day, but that their gains were larger in a shorter time and consequently a greater net profit. Yearlings require less grain for each pound of gain on a ton.

Of course the condition of the animal at the beginning of the feeding period is an important factor and it need hardly be said that the best results are obtained from the use of the best animals to feed. This year Shorthorn Polled Shorthorn, Hereford and Angus steers were privately fed and shown in the same carload lots. They were purchased by using Shorthorn bulls for the Shorthorn and grades and Angus bulls for the Angus and grades to preserve the same quality of the sire, which is important. Then the cattle were fed the same ration in the same lots. The Shorthorns were the heaviest and selling prices in proportion to their weights, Herefords or Polled Shorthorns and Angus were the two-third Shorthorn, Hereford or Polled Shorthorn and Angus with the cheaper grades of cattle in it sold for the lowest prices per hundred, the prevailing stage before putting them on the market.

Select the Male Pig Early.

We have in mind an instance where a somewhat prominent breeder of pigs ventured a large herd in the month of August with a view to the end of selecting a male, says the Iowa Homestead. The animals were about twelve months old and 100 males in this herd, as could be true in all cases, the line breeder offered to let his choice go at a price that would be considered low for 225. The owner, however, refused to do this. He even went so far and said to his herdsman that the price was high and did not make a purchase. The herdsman, who had a good eye for number, after the type of this breed, went over the herd and the same man asked for price on a male. Immediately the herdsman declined the same, and the breeder's price then was $50, and the animal was better than he made after forty or fifty of the best animals had been sold. He was selected, but neither the buyer nor the seller realized that the best animal was filled with as good a pig as could have been purchased for $25 earlier in the season.

Keep the Young Stock Growing.

One of the most common faults we can make as a stock raiser is to neglect the young stock when we have to do more of the older animals. We may have a couple of 500 to 800 pounds to weight and fatten for market, and we do it in two years. Yearlings are quite frequently neglected in this respect. Some project to provide a generous ration, sometimes, but when the time for the spring, and the cattle begin to run down in flesh, the young stock and the extra daily portion of grain will be neglected, and the yearlings will be short of bone and muscle. Some of the most successful stockmen we know of are apt to pass from the time their foals are weaned to the end of the second growing them in mind.

Bread From Mature Animals.

Considerable has been said of consumptive meat in this section of the country. Some people will not eat meat from mature stock always tends to avoid bringing it into use and it says: "We need not go further than to the Bible to find the reason why. In Israelitish times breeding of young ills and diseases was not known, and as it has been greatly reduced, but the vitality of the animals has been reduced until it is not an uncommon sight to see whole droves mowed down with cholera. There is no question that the meat of young animals is better to use than any other thing."

Stock and Fertility.

The greater number of animals that can be kept comfortably upon the farm the greater will be the amount of natural fertility of the soil and hence the greater the profits. Animals are the means by which is turn permit a larger number of animals.

WOULD DEDICATE FIELD IN 1913

Suggestion Made that Battlefield Be Formally Dedicated in Connection with Fiftieth Anniversary, Park Commission Hears It.

The formal dedication of the Gettysburg National Military Park on the fiftieth anniversary, in 1913, of the battle of Gettysburg, and the construction of the Lincoln Memorial Highway from Washington to the battlefield, are favored in the report of the National Park Commission in its annual report to the Secretary of War, made public Saturday, in addition to the approaching completion of the park and more.

"The commission has written in imperishable bronze and granite, 'settlement peace and without concord,' the history of the army of the Potomac and of the army of Northern Virginia on the field at Gettysburg."

Further army officers, says the report, have expressed admiration of the work on the Gettysburg field and have sent to their governments commissions come as an incentive for the improvement of the battlefields of the old world.

On the battlefield "286 monuments, 700 bronze and 44 granite tablets, 800 mounted cannon, and 320 iron tablets have been erected. Position occupied during the battle by both Union and Confederate forces have been indicated alike.

The Philadelphia Press in commenting on the report says editorially:

"The successive reports of the Gettysburg National Park serve to the bristled of statements the gradual growth of true peace sentiment of the American brethren where covered the mightiest struggle of the world War. The fiftieth anniversary of that contest is at hand and the annual report of the commission for 1911 naturally deals with that event. It will be well if its patriotic labors have been in a mere preparatory.

"The proper celebration of the fifth anniversary of the battle of Gettysburg was first called by the commission in 1908. It will be an event of the widest importance to the world of the common men in the development of the national park and in the preservation by permanent monuments of the great incidents of the war. Orientation and location of all the troops, makes that body and its work an indispensable part of this celebration. It will be perhaps the last great memorial celebration of the Civil War in which the actual participants, by the great struggle on both sides will actively participate in large numbers. The occasion is a noble one and the field by reason of more than forty years' preparation offers a magnificent scene for the fitting observance of a chapter in the history of the greatest interest and significance to the people of this country, North and South.

"The Commission's report deals with the dedication of the Gettysburg National Park. The portion of the battle held intrenched in the National Cemetery was dedicated during the war, but the national park which has been gradually growing so as to include the entire field of the struggle has never been formally dedicated. It is now finished or nearly so that further dedication will be relatively unimportant and the time has come for the formal and solemn dedication to exist as a memorial forever.

What time so proper and propitious for this most interesting event as the fiftieth anniversary of the battle fought on that field in 1864. Bills are before Congress to give that dedication a national sanction and it should be a fitting successor to the first dedication of a portion of the field, an event made unforgettable by President Lincoln's immortal address."

LOCAL CHOIR TO ORGANIZE

Chautauqua Choir Decides to Form a Permanent Organization. Temporary Officers Elected. Future Plans for Society.

The association of Gettysburg singers, known as the Chautauqua choir through their ensemble work at the Chautauqua Assembly, decided to organize at their practice for the county Sunday School convention on Monday evening to form a permanent organization. Temporary officers were elected as follows: J. L. Taylor, president; Mrs. Ross Bushman, secretary; Mark A. Robert, pianist; I. L. Taylor, leader.

It is expected to have the organ recitaled made up of the above officers and Miss Ruth Slaybaugh, Miss Helen Hoke and Harry Trostle.

Later permanent officers will be chosen, and for the organization will be selected and the permanent organization effected. It is probable that this will take the place of the defunct Gettysburg Choral Society but it is not the purpose of those interested in it to organize in any way such ambitious projects as those which were taken up by their predecessors.

The fact that Gettysburg has an abundance of vocal talent has never been questioned and this was splendidly demonstrated by the Chautauqua choir and its work at the Assembly. The gratulations that it is not going to be allowed to pass out of existence and its work of the summer months There are also many who have expressed the wish that it will most probably increase as interest and enthusiasm grows.

Some special concert work has already been suggested for the holiday holidays and the society starts upon its career with the best wishes of the entire community. Its success is the one that form of entertainment foster-ed.

SURVEYS ROAD

Forester Robert O. Conklin of the Catoctin State reserve is now engaged in a work that will prove of great value to him in his work and will also be useful to the many persons who use the roads on the reserve either for pleasure or business.

The Catoctin reserve lies on both sides of the Chambersburg pike, Conklin's work is that of which he is engaged in making a survey of all the roads, both for and back from the pike reserve. When the map from these surveys is completed it will be used as a working basis in improving the roads.

The idea in working out is to have a road of the best possible grade from any other road or lane. This will be done in many instances, but not all the roads will be improved.

The different plats, made by the various roads and lanes, will be drawn, set and afterwards designated by scientific names.

The roads will be marked with sign boards that people may wander through the mountains without fear of getting lost. The signs, as well as the roads and fire lanes, but the uninitiated have to go far he does not know whither they lead.

A COLORED WITNESS

By F. A. MITCHEL

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

In the days of slavery Colonel Augustus Picard, a Kentucky planter, had an altercation with a neighbor about the boundary line between the two plantations. The neighbor, Elias Green, a northern-born farmer, who offered a bounty to the colonel, who struck him out of his house, drew upon him for assault, and one of the colonel's slaves, Mark Antony by name, having seen the fracas, was the only witness. The case was a short-lasting old chap, and the lawyers knew that unless they could have testimony sufficient to give an account of what had occurred on the line the defendant, not wishing to draw out all the time and to risk against him but a few questions, they turned him over to the counsel for the plaintiff.

"Mark Antony," said the lawyer, "do you know what it is to state anything before this court that is not true or to keep back anything that you know?"

"Do I know dat?"

"Yes. Do you understand what it means and the punishment?"

"I reckon dat means I'se gwine to de fust place de sarnts's I'd sell de moon I'se made o' cheese when I knowed I war made o' bones. And de second place I'd be sent to de hot fire whar his han' grow down a knife on my nare' and cut off my nare' to make room for his'n. A sarnts proved over the throne of de Lawd."

"Well, sah, on dat statement."

"Well, sah, on dat afternoon Massa Green war a-ridin' on his plantation."

"What plantation?"

"Massa Green's plantation."

"Where was your master?"

"He war a-ridin' on his plantation."

"Was you in the employ of any one who is known as a gentleman?"

"Yes, sah; I war in the employ of de gentleman, and I was waitin' at de house. I was in de kitchen when I driv de consent out fo' de massa' gentleman to ride on his plantation, and I was waitin' at de house. I was in de kitchen when I driv de consent out fo' de massa' gentleman to ride on his plantation, and I was in de cuzzen's office right at de massa's elbow when he and de cuzzen 'ere talkin'."

"Mark Antony, was you sayin' to de consent dat de line between de plantations was in dispute?"

"Yes, sah; I didn't see dat."

"Did you see Colonel Picard when Mr. Green come through the door?"

"Yes, sah; I see him."

"Didn't you see him or any part of him?"

"No, sah."

"What did you see he 'fore Mr' Green?"

"Nothin' but a boot."

"Where?" the embarrassed counsel. "Well, suppose you let the jury where that boot was with reference to Mr' Green."

"Behin' Green was settin' on it."

"Sittin' on it?"

"Yes, sah; he was settin' on it in de air."

"Do you mean to say you don't know to whom the boot belonged?"

"Don't know nothin' 'bout it, sah."

Tell the jury how it was that you knew that the boot, you mentioned, was in the air."

"Well, sah, de steps leadin' down to de cellar was on de side of de house, sah. I was lookin' sideways. I couldn't see how Mr' Green had dis boot on and not lookin' from de side o' de house."

The counsel for the plaintiff, seeing nothing is identify the assertion by Mark Antony, withdrew and rested his case. The defendant's counsel merely asked the jury to find for the defendant on account of the person of Green had been committed on the property and addressed that his client had made its trespass.

The judge instructed the jury that it may constituted that it had not proved that Picard assaulted Green they were to find for the plaintiff. If not, for they defendant. They found for the defendant.

"Mr' Sumph," said Colonel Picard, "will you please to call a carriage? I will not be to get the room in this case and a fine of $10? I regret it a deem that I should have been provoked to have kicked the plaintiff out of my house."

"Yes, Cun'l Picard," replied Judge.

GOOD SINGING AND ADDRESSES

Sunday Sunday School Convention Marked by Music, Instruction and Enthusiasm. Large Attendance at Thursday Night Session.

Inspiring singing, instructive addresses and a general spirit of hopeful progressiveness in Sunday School work are the three things which especially characterize the sessions of the fourth annual convention of the Adams County Sabbath School Association which convened in the College Lutheran church.

The large Chautauqua Choir, occupying a platform beautifully decorated with plants, led the congregation in its singing at Thursday evening's session. The choice was ideal for the meeting and a number were unable to gain admittance.

The addresses of the convention opening made by those thoroughly conversant with Sunday School work Thursday afternoon Prof. C F Sander spoke on "County Associations, Desirable? Yes. C. F. Plote on "The Sunday School as a Social Force"; Rev. W. K. Fisch on "The Sunday School as a Center of Study" and Rev. C. W. Baker on "The Sunday School as a Missionary Force."

At Rest, a state field worker talked on "The Organized Adult Bible Class" and Miss Martha Robinson, who contains a similar position in the Sunday School work on "Graded Lessons for Elementary Grades."

Thursday evening Miss Robinson's subject was "The Elementary Vision and Opportunity." Rev. C. F. Deatrick, of Harrisburg, addressed the large audience on the "Teacher Training Class Movement and its Significance."

Mr. Beahley touches on this subject. Four hundred and five hundred men and ladies from county superintendents. His address Thursday evening received the closest attention and though the convention did not adjourn until after ten o'clock.

Friday the addresses were by Rev. Joseph S. Baker, Rev. Frederick C. Stewart, Rev. W. H. Greever, Rev. D. Rost and Dr. M. Cramer. The report of the convention secretary, Miss Lily Dougherty, was also received.

The officers of the county association are: president, Rev. Jos. S. Baker, Hill, Littlestown; treasurer, H. T. Warner, Gettysburg; corresponding secretary, Miss Lily Dougherty, Gettysburg; recording secretary, Miss Margaret Sherrick, Gettysburg. The department superintendents are: Teacher Training, Rev. Prof. C. F. Sanders, Gettysburg; Home Department, Rev. Charles Daboll, Littlestown; Elementary Department, Marvella Winrodes, Littlestown; organized Adult Bible Class, H. E. Bair, Hanover.

CONVENTION NOTES

The plan of having a parade of Sunday School workers has been abandoned for several reasons.

More than one third of the population of Adams County is in Sunday School. When the non-Protestant residents are taken into consideration the percentage is even larger.

The exterior of the College Lutheran church with its pretty electrical illumination looks its best. The church has been repainted recently and the handsome old fixture is more attractive than ever.

The singing of the Chautauqua Choir at Thursday evening's meeting was the subject for many favorable comment. Mr. I. L. Taylor, the leader directed an excellent choir and certainly the occasion could have enjoyed a better Thursday evening's session.

The delegates are most appreciative of the efforts being made by the local committee in the way of entertainment, decorations and so on.

W. H. Tipton made a flashlight photograph of the Chautauqua Choir on the platform during the evening's session.

CONVENTION NOTES

An attractive souvenir book has been issued by the committee in charge of the convention. In addition to the program it contains the names of the officers for the past year and other information of value.

The total number of Sunday School scholars enrolled in the various county schools is about 10,000. In 1907 there were 599 officials in the Home Department and 987 on the City roll.

WILL PLACE THE EIGHT STATUES

General Beidelspurger, Chairman of Pennsylvania Gettysburg Monument Commission, Here in Connection with Memorial.

General H. S. Beidelspurger, chairman of the Pennsylvania Gettysburg Memorial Commission, arrived in this city this afternoon to confer with the contractor in connection with the placing of the eight statues which are being placed on the monument and the correction of mistakes in the tablets.

The statues will be as War Governor Curtin, Generals Meade, Reynolds, Hancock, Pennsylvania, Slocum and Gregg. They will be of bronze, eight feet in height, and will represent the most striking position or those having done work which entitled them to the recognition which will be given contrasts for the work.

The statues will be completed, they will be placed without any further delay and the commission will follow the completion of the work.

A push is to be built about the monument, which will be about 12 feet cross, this matter to be settled also at the meeting of the commission today session.

Of the 34,000 names on the tablets which compose one of the distinctive features of the monument, there have been only 190 complaints of errors and of these some are so very slight as to that no asterisk was placed indicating that the soldier's name was on the battle field. The correction of ninety of these errors are completed and by the close of next month all the others will nearly before a time. The work is being done by the Gettysburg Granite Co. It is considered remarkable that so few errors were found out of a large number of names.

The work of the completion of this work expects to have additional names placed on the monument before the close up. There are several hundred of these names which will be placed on the tablets. Haidespurger this morning spoke of an official letter which he had received stating as the time of the battle who the thirty, but that he was so fault of this, but was not here for the fight. But this name has as much right on a tablet as that of a soldier commissioned by the commonest whenever so deserving
